Gavin Henrick. The account reads "we" throughout and both fathers signed it. She would like him to get his big, gorgeous carcass out of her way so that she can carry on with her work. This time, things were more complicated than they are usually, since my friend. She criticizes the Eichmann court for admitting so much irrelevant 'evidence,' in the form of holocaust survivor's testimony--the court, she says, can only judge the moral guilt of a person for their actions, the court is not the place for social theory or wider considerations. But the loudest complaint was that although the flat was much too big for their present circumstances, they could not move out of it, there was no imaginable way of transferring Gregor to the new address. In a Posthumanist vein, science fiction texts often illustrate the intersections of technology and humanity, as well as offer humbling visions of nature.
